Government Policies to control population

- Anti-Natal policies: policies that limit the number of children
- Most famous is China's One-Child Policy
- India – boys preferred but no official government policy

- Huge numbers of abortions, abandonments and sterilizations
- More female children lost in preference for boys
- Unbalanced gender ratio with 30 million more males than women leading to
 - kidnapping
 - violence against women
 - blackmarket trade in women

Consequences of China's one child policy

What are the consequences of decreased population that comes with anti-natal policies?

- Economic impacts
 - Less production
 - Less innovation
 - fewer products (food, homes, schools) needed so economy declines
- Social impacts
 - gender imbalances
 - aging population (dependents) who require more govt services

Pro-natal policies: encourage more babies

- Enacted in places where populations are declining
 - Russia, Germany, Japan, Singapore, France
- Governments give tax breaks, gifts, money to have children
 - time off work with pay
 - cruises, resort stays
 - cash payments

One way to increase population?

Encourage immigration
by increasing quotas (number of migrants allowed)

Migration

- Movement by people from one place to another with the intentions of settling, permanently or temporarily, in a new location
- Often over long distances
- Usually from one country to another
- May or may not be planned

- Push factors: reasons people leave their homes
 - war, famine
 - poverty, unemployment
 - persecution, threats to safety

- Pull factors: reasons that are attractive enough to make a person move
 - personal safety, political freedom
 - education and employment opportunities
 - family and ethnic connections

Types of immigration

- Legal immigration
- Refugees
- Guest workers
- Undocumented immigrants

Refugees

- UN requires member nations to take in, provide aid, and assistance to refugees
 - refugee: people who are forced out of their home via some form of violence
- Best example today is refugee crisis in Syria

Effects of Refugees

- Strain on resources and services which affects refugees and nation's population
- Creates political unrest
- Integration issues with tension between refugees and citizens
- Poor conditions in refugee camps

Immigration Policies of Host Countries

- Policies fit into 1 of 2 categories
 - quota system
 - guest worker

Quota System – United States

- Limits the number of foreign citizens who can migrate permanently
- First enacted in US by Quota Act in 1921 and the National Origins Act in 1924
- At that time, designed to ensure that most immigrants to US continued to be Europeans
- Does not apply to refugees who must prove they are genuine refugees

Guest Workers – Western Europe and Middle East

- Work visa immigrants who are expected to work under a contract and then return home
- Usually take low status and low skilled jobs that local residents won't accept
- Usually earn far more than they would at home and send a large percentage of their earnings back home

US attitudes toward immigrants

- Have always regarded new arrivals with suspicion
- More recently states such as California have voted new legislation for undocumented immigrants
 - limited access to public services : schools, day care centers, health clinics
 - difficult to enforce and potentially violate constitution

Possible solutions to undocumented immigrants

- Deportation
 - problem: many have children who are US citizens
- Amnesty
 - secure borders, vet those who are already here, document for citizenship
 - deport criminals while giving others path to citizenship

Should a nation just accept immigrants?

- Pros?
 - diversifies local economies
 - increases the population base
 - many are entrepreneurs
 - raises GDP
 - fills gaps in labor market

Should a nation just accept immigrants?

- Cons?

- can cause over-population
- can create wage inequality
- can stress educational and health resources
- can create integration difficulties
- can strain local resources
- can split up families
